A: It was somewhere around 4 a.m., and I was on a zigzagging hike in Tanzania on the final push to the top of Mount Kilimanjaro, the tallest mountain in the world. I couldn't tell you how far I walked or how far I left -I could see nothing but my lamp. The only indication of the distance still to go was the line of lamps at our ahead, but those lights just kept going up higher and higher.

B: I couldn't hold back tears as Peter, an assistant guide, stopped to make sure the height wasn't creating emergency problems, like it had for the hikers we met laying on the side of the road. Peter smiled and told me to stop crying and instead breathe more to get oxygen to my brain.

C: There were still hours of climbing left to go. "You can cry later," he promised. I started climbing Kilimanjaro a week earlier, together with 10 other hikers and a team of 42 from Gladys Adventure, including guides, cooks, water specialists and porters.

D: There are several routes (ways) you can take up the mountain -- all of which need a guide - and we were on the eight-day Lemosho Route. It's longer, but because it needs more time to walk, your body gets ready for a lot of travel.

E: Four hours after Peter told me to stop crying, after the sunrise, I stopped at the sign saying I was at the top of Kilimanjaro, with a small crowd around it waiting to take pictures.
